RELIGIOUS EDUCATION RESEARCH GROUP

The Religious Education Research Group departs from the philosophy that religion is important as an aspect in building the nation. History shows that development through religious education affects the characteristics and identity of the nation, starting from behavior to the political sphere.

This research group pays attention to education which provides knowledge, attitudes, and skills of students in practicing their religious teachings. The focus of this research group is on learning which includes improving knowledge and skills and also behavior changing.

Religious education includes education organized by the state or by religious-based educational institutions. The foundations that organize religious education are Islam, Christianity, Catholicism, Hinduism, Buddhism and Confucianism.
